

Welcome to Customer Care

This section covers our team, how we work, and what a good day looks like.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Your first week

This section covers shadowing, system access, and the certification quiz.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

Tone and empathy

This section covers how we write to customers and what to avoid.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

The order system

This section covers finding orders, notes, and the returns tab.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Phone etiquette

This section covers greetings, holds, and transfers.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Chat and email

This section covers response times, templates, and signatures.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Refunds and store credit

This section covers who can approve what, and when a lead is needed.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Warranty claims

This section covers proof of purchase, serial numbers, and replacement units.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Shipping problems

This section covers lost, late, and damaged packages.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

Product knowledge: blenders

This section covers models, speeds, and common questions.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Product knowledge: mixers

This section covers attachments, bowls, and speeds.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Product knowledge: kettles and toasters

This section covers settings and safety.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

Difficult conversations

This section covers angry customers, threats, and when to hand off.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Escalations

This section covers what goes to a lead and what goes to legal.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Privacy and security

This section covers verifying identity and what never to say on a call.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Quality reviews

This section covers how tickets are scored each month.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Schedules and time off

This section covers shift swaps, holidays, and sick days.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

Tools we use

This section covers the order system, the phone system, and the knowledge base.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Metrics

This section covers first-response time, resolution time, and satisfaction.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Holiday season

This section covers the November and December playbook.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Accessibility

This section covers helping customers who use assistive technology.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Recalls

This section covers what to do if a product is recalled.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. New agents should read this section before their first live shift.

Feedback to product

This section covers how customer feedback reaches the product team.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong.

Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Leaving the team

This section covers offboarding and returning equipment.

We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes.

Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short. Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month.

A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. New agents should read this section before their first live shift. Our target is a first response within four business hours on email and two minutes on chat.

If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. Supervisors review a sample of tickets from every agent each month. Every exception you make should have a reason in the ticket notes. Write down what you promised the customer in the ticket so the next agent can follow through.

Remember that most customers contact us only when something has gone wrong. Avoid jargon such as SKU or RMA when talking to customers. A calm, specific answer is better than a fast vague one. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do.

When in doubt, ask in the leads channel rather than guessing. If a policy and this handbook disagree, the policy document wins and you should tell a lead. We never argue with a customer about what they experienced; we work out what we can do. Use the customer's name, and keep sentences short.